

Terrorism in modern times

In light of the events of 11 September, the war on terrorism has been given centre stage in efforts to guarantee not only national but also the entire system of international security. Many countries continue to fully support the international community's efforts in that regard, unequivocally condemning terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, irrespective of its political, economic, religious or other motives. However, the war on terrorism should not be used to target any particular religion or culture.

As terrorism increasingly acquires the proportions of a global threat, it becomes imperative for the international community to join forces to meet the challenge by adopting a unified approach, not merely by pursuing individual States' interests. I'm of the view that international counter-terrorism efforts over the long term should target not so much individual terrorist organizations, groups and individuals but rather the root causes of terrorism. Terrorist acts — a form of politically motivated extremism — all share one characteristic, namely the use of violence for political ends.

- Terrorism is closely related to aggressive separatism, organized crime and trafficking in drugs, weapons and human beings. Areas of armed conflict, especially in occupied and uncontrolled territories, constitute fertile soil for terrorist and criminal groupings to flourish.

The objectives of the work:

- to learn theoretical aspects of terrorism
- to hold the investigation using such methods as testing and questioning my classmates
